Literary Devices - :

- 1) Alliteration: use of sound 'b' at the start of two words - behind bars.
- 2) Metonymy: This rhetorical device consists of the substitution of the name of an attribute for that of the thing meant.
Using the device of metonymy in this stanza, the poet uses the word "strength", to mean the body of the tiger, where the entire strength of this majestic creature resides and which is locked up within a cage in the zoo.
- 3) Alliteration: use of sound "h" at the start of two words - he hears.

- 4) Rhyme Scheme - Each of the five stanzas of "A tiger in the zoo" follows the same simple rhyme scheme - ABCB.
